A state grand jury investigating a possible government coverup in the April 19, 1995, Oklahoma City bombing has subpoenaed six people to testify on evidence in the case this week, the Sunday Oklahoman reported.

The witnesses include two men who claim they saw convicted bomber Timothy J. McVeigh driving through Oklahoma City on the morning of the bombing and insist he was not alone.

Kyle Hunt, a banker from Broken Arrow, has said he saw McVeigh driving a light-colored sedan with two other men inside. He claims they were following a Ryder truck like the one used later that morning to blow up the Alfred P. Murrah Federal Building, killing 168 people. David Snider, a warehouse worker, has said he saw McVeigh inside a Ryder truck with one other man shortly before the bombing and that they were driving through a downtown area at a snail's pace. The paper said both men and four others would testify before the Oklahoma County grand jury starting today. State officials were forced to impanel a grand jury after 10,600 local residents signed a petition demanding it.
