The FBI (website) has shut their case on the Oklahoma City bombing, but Terry Nichols is speaking out from his jail cell. He says a Royal, Arkansas, man has a closer connection to the Oklahoma City bombing than people think.

You may remember Roger Moore. He's a gun collector from Royal, Arkansas. FBI officials were able to trace the explosives from the bombing to Moore and his home in Arkansas.

Moore said he was robbed prior to the bombing, but recently, Terry Nichols is accusing Roger Moore of providing the explosives to Timothy McVeigh.

Kathy Sanders lost two grandchildren in the Oklahoma City bombing. She has been corresponding with Terry Nichols for years. She says Nichols told her this:

(Sanders)"He said the Kinstick came from Roger Moore's Royal, Arkansas, home."

(Sanders) "Terry Nichols believes Roger Moore is an FBI informant. There's all sorts of problems with this story."

Kathy has made it her mission to seek the truth in this story, and for ten years, her own investigation has prompted her to write the book, After Oklahoma City, in honor of her two grandsons, Chase and Colton.

Channel Seven spoke with Roger Moore by phone from his Florida home. He denies the story and any involvement in the bombing.
